Australian artist, Demi McLeod will showcase 20 canvases painted over the last two years. Titled 'Gradual Instant', the exhibition will be her second solo exhibition showcasing her work here. The artist chose the title because of the long period of time she had been working, the mediums she has used and also because she likes to work on a number of paintings simultaneously.

"Often one of the first things I do is put on washes of colour using acrylics, which sets the mood for the painting. Then I begin to build up layers using oil glazes, often working back into those layers. Oil paint needs at least two or three months to cure before you can do that, so it's a gradual process," she explains.

Born in Zimbabwe, Demi lived in Malawi, England, Luxembourg, South Africa and Australia before settling in Bahrain. ■ Call 36 425-701.
